Tom Daugherty, 53, entered the plea in a Scottsdale courtroom where his attorney asked the judge to set a trial date. Superior Court Judge Steve LeBrock of Phoenix set a trial date of July 29. Daugherty remains in jail. Prosecutors say Daugherty kidnapped a woman from her home at knifepoint and sexually battered her. He remains free on $60,000 bail. Daugherty's attorney, James Blanchard Jr., declined comment. Daugherty has been accused of assaulting another woman in another county. He hasn't been convicted of any crime. "I want to see that justice is done in this case," his wife, Ruth Daugherty, told The Associated Press after the hearing. Defense lawyer Gary Feiss said he

Supply and demand and the economics of the marketplace. In the modern business marketplace, these concepts have been applied to create an effective, low cost market solution that is 100% owned and controlled by companies. That solution is Programmable Printing™ (www.programmable.org), a new service that enables one to not only print full color in real time (see below), but in addition to doing so at a very low cost per unit. This has never been accomplished before. More importantly, Programmable Printing™ allows its users to have complete control over the colors, images, and designs used in the printing process; affording full scale product creativity and ensuring that an audience of potential customers will be highly satisfied with the final outcome. In addition, companies that use Programmable Printing™ can present various methods of collecting points and awarding prizes to customers; effectively increasing sales and retaining customers. For example, a customer can purchase a program that enables them to play and win prizes throughout the duration of their purchase, or in lieu of a purchase, companies can customize their printer with a lottery that they can run on a daily, weekly, or monthly basis. In either case, consumers receive the ultimate value proposition. The key is that companies no longer need to purchase costly production equipment in order to market their goods; they can instead apply all of their resources towards finding and providing solutions that they would have otherwise purchased. Think about it. What would have happened to the world economy if Apple, Microsoft, or Microsoft's online store had to spend tens of millions of dollars designing a printer? That is what puts most in competition's to their knees. With Programmable Printing™, companies become the very devices that generate commerce in the first place. You could say that the world is no longer, "in the hands of the few," (or in other words, they control commerce). Rather, it's in the hands of the many. And it will never be the same again. With Programmable Printing™, we want to prove it. Companies that utilize the power of Programmable Printing™ include Carlson, our clients of many years standing; as well as our recent clients...GeoStar International, a global provider of mobile broadband and location-based solutions, Matica, a provider of Internet services, and custom silicon development for PC's, smartphones, GPS handsets, sensors, and home automation; and a list of other organizations that are not publicly listed. A Sydney girl and her maid had fallen in love and decided to elope. An Indonesian seaman had died while working on a massive cruise ship in Sydney. And a German man was detained in Australia for going to the doctor because he lacked a visa. The terms "eloping" and "refugee camp" are often used interchangeably, but amid Australia's recent asylum policy woes, the former must be re-examined. According to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, there are more than one million refugees and displaced people globally, with 1.1 million in dire need of international protection. The majority of them live in underdeveloped nations where they are not able to access basic health care, electricity or schooling. The developing world makes up more than 40 percent of the global refugee population and the number of people in such nations has been rising for the past four decades. These people are acutely aware of Australia's reputation for being a place of freedom. The majority of the world's refugees arrive in Australia via the infamous "boat people" or sea trade route, over which more than 700 people have died this year alone. One of the most important components of Australia's post-
